

Example Outline Template of Writing a Statement of Purpose

By writer.com

Example Outline Template of Writing a Statement of Purpose

I. Information About Self

My profound interest in world affairs informs my interest in pursuing a post-graduate degree in Political Science. Majoring in the Structure of Governments during my final year as an undergraduate student made me interested in the sphere of Political Science. Moreover, my several trips to Washington, D.C., have served to intensify my motivation to take this course. In particular, a visit to Capitol Hill gave me the impression that it is men and women who take courage to join politics that, ultimately, shape the destinies of communities and countries. In this sense, my application for admission into the Political Science program is part of my journey into the world of politics.

II. Purpose of Writing

My reason for applying for admission into the Master's Degree in Political Science is that my background in International Relations, despite its theoretical strength, has minimal implications on my desire to join politics. Indeed, the program has exposed me to politically intense fields, such as conflict resolution and peacekeeping. However, it does not provide a direct platform for engaging with political affairs at the grassroots. I believe such involvement requires a keen understanding of the dynamics that shape political persuasions in local communities. I understand that the Political Science program has modules that involve exposing students to legislative caucuses to provide them with real-life experiences in the political sphere.

III. The Essence of a Program

I firmly believe that I am the student that the university and the faculty wish to see admitted to the Political Science program. Besides having a Bachelor's degree in International Relations, I have also completed a two-year internship with the Office of the US Senator for Illinois. I must admit this experience was tremendous in influencing my desire to pursue a political career. In my undergraduate thesis, I focused on the dynamics that inhibit the normalization of diplomatic relations between the United States and North Korea. I reflected on the history of hostility between these two countries and how domestic politics have played a significant role in informing political chest-thumping in any process intended to create normalcy in diplomacy between the two states. My paper, "Empty Rhetoric as Political Propaganda," which I published on my blog during my internship, has received broad readership and made me a guest in several gatherings by political lobby groups. This is to say that I have managed to build a strong presence in the state political environment, which has motivated me to pursue further education, this time in Political Science. The Senator for Illinois, whom I served diligently, has become an influential voice in my life and stands out as one of my mentors and role models. Based on my outstanding service during my internship, his office has written a recommendation letter for me, which is available at the faculty's request.

IV. Future Plans

Looking into the future, I intend to be a key figure in state politics, and I believe the Political Science program will elevate me to that pedestal. My long-term career goal is to be the Senator of Illinois, my home state. In this position, I will be able to practically influence public policy in Washington, D.C., for the positive outcome of my constituents and the country at large. I believe this intention exemplifies the American Dream.